CAPPER SPEAKS FOR SEN. LENROOT

Progressive Senator From Kansas Tells of Lenroot's Record to Minoqua Crowd.

(Special to Gazette)

Minoqua, Wis., Aug. 27.—Senator Arthur Capper of Kansas, known as one of the leading progressives of the senate and the bitter and implacable enemy of the profiteer, came to Minoqua today and this afternoon he addressed a large assembly in the hall of the Minoqua Hotel.

Senator Capper's speech. It would be wasting time for one coming here among you to read in a lengthy review of the public services of Wisconsin's distinguished son, Senator Irving L. Lenroot, and I shall attempt such a review. You people of the Badger State know far better than I do the splendid service Senator Lenroot rendered you while a member and speaker of your house of representatives. You also are far better acquainted than I with his career during the ten years of his service in the lower house of congress.

Suffice it to say that during that period Senator Lenroot was able to impress himself on the consciousness of his fellow countrymen far beyond the bounds of Wisconsin. We out in Kansas have learned to know him and respect him as one of the rising figures in our national life. That he remained in the house would have been the support of the Republican members from my state for the speakership for he had shown himself the progressive type of Republican that we out on our broad prairie believe in. I am sure that a great honor that I have had the privilege of serving with him and his arrival in the senate, and it is his work there that I shall speak particularly.

Senator Lenroot's Service. During his service in the house, as ranking member of the committee on public lands, Mr. Lenroot had a large part in pushing through that body legislation for the conservation of our natural resources. This legislation failed in the senate during the time that Mr. Lenroot was serving in the house, and so he had the pleasure of seeing its passage in the senate, and at the last session, largely through his efforts, a bill of similar character to that which failed in the house was passed through the senate. The water power legislation enacted at the last session of congress and which he had a large part in framing as a member of the senate and likewise follows the conservation policy urged by Mr. Lenroot when he was a member of the house.

But it was in the fight over the German peace treaty and the league of nations that Senator Lenroot stood out most conspicuously during the extraordinary and last regular sessions of the senate. It was the duty of the senate to ratify the treaty but at the same time securing reservations that would protect American interests. He was of great assistance to Senator Lodge in framing the reservations as they were finally agreed to. He is not saying too far to say that he had the largest part in drafting the reservations in their final form, and this is a great credit to him. Senator Lenroot in view of the traditions of the United States senate which presuppose a rather reserved attitude on the part of a member.

On the League. Senator Lenroot early saw the necessity of continuing the reservations to make the league acceptable. For that reason he supported none of the amendments proposed to the text of the treaty which would have made the league more palatable to the conservative republicans. He urged the reservations whose terms dealt merely with American participation in the league of nations and the execution of the treaty. The soundness of his position is attested by the fact that in the end not only the republicans but a majority of the democrats came around to his views on the treaty. Except for the flat of Woodrow Wilson the senate would have ratified the league with the reservations so largely formulated by your distinguished junior senator.

What appeals most to me in the personality and record of your senator is that they show him to be a thorough republican, progressive and constructive in his attitude and his action. He is always listened to with the closest attention. He has the wisdom not to indulge in too much speechmaking and what he says is always to the point.

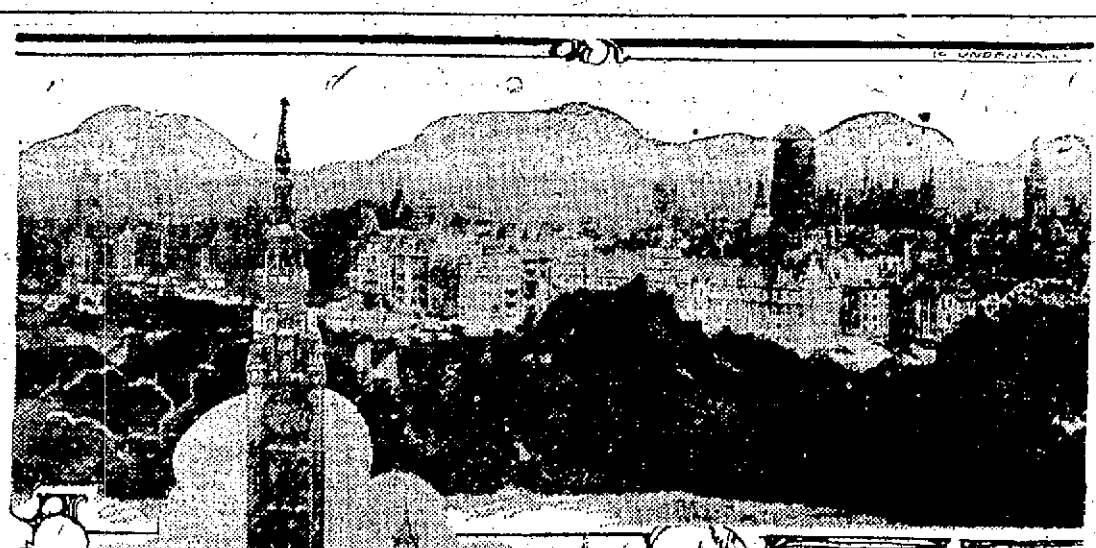

Need Sen. Lenroot. In the great days ahead—the days of readjustment the senate will have need for Senator Lenroot. His wide and deep knowledge of taxation, the tariff, and other matters that will engage the attention of congress, make him a needed figure in our public life. It is all but inconceivable to his colleagues, who know his great ability and his devotion to his work, that Wisconsin should fail to send back to the senate her distinguished son. Such a failure would be a loss not only to Wisconsin but to the whole nation. I hope when I return to Washington in December I shall have the pleasure of greeting Senator Lenroot and congratulating him on the possession of a certificate of election to another six year term. I have faith that the people of Wisconsin will give him the reward and respect that he so richly deserves.

Art Is Arrested for Smuggling Art Objects

Berlin.—Albert Gabriel of Stuttgart, a famous painter, has been arrested at Munich charged with smuggling art objects and securities worth millions of marks across the Swiss border, according to the Tageszeitung's Munich correspondent. The monastery was to be transferred to Switzerland and the alleged that Gabriel arranged with two Munich art dealers to include several boxes of paintings and art objects for shipment with the monastery. The matter was not detected until arrival at Lindau where boxes of paintings valued at 6,000,000 marks were discovered. The art objects valued at 800,000 marks were found sewn up in mattresses. It is charged that the abbey was to receive 1,000,000 marks for the losses suffered in founding another religious establishment. A high Berlin official is said to be solicited in the matter and art dealers have also been arrested.

Danzig, at Head of Polish Corridor, May Be Next Objective of the Reds

Two Views of Danzig

At the present moment Danzig, on the Baltic, at the head of the Polish "corridor," is strategically the most important port in Europe. It is the port which was made a free city by the Versailles peace treaty, and which was to assure to Poland that outlet to the sea so necessary to her continued existence as an independent nation. The famous Polish corridor, as the narrow strip of land along the "Vistula" connecting the main body of Poland with the port of Danzig has come to be known, is the only direct avenue for the shipment of supplies from the Baltic sea to interior Poland.

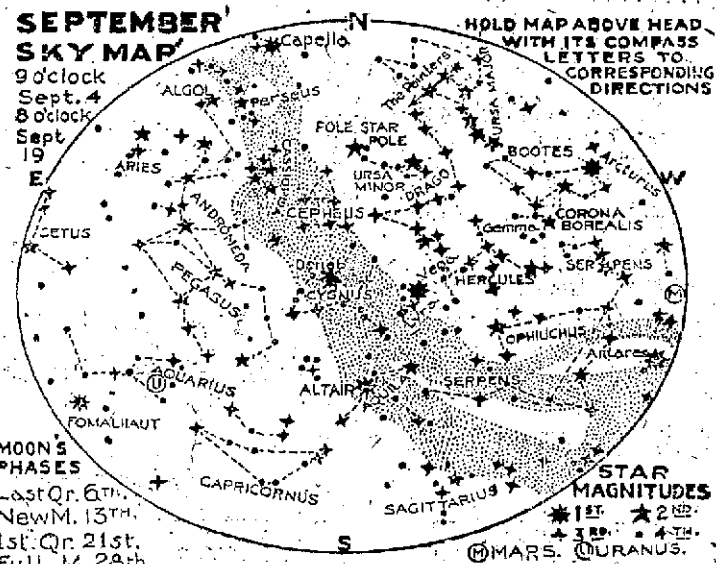

Early in the present month the bolshevik forces cut the Danzig-Warsaw railroad at Gdansk, and next move may be against Danzig itself. Meanwhile, dispatches from East Prussia reveal that the Germans are watching with eagerness the developments from the sea. Their enthusiasm for the bolshevik advance, conversations which correspondents have had with German military men along the East Prussian border show that the Germans would welcome the seizure of the Polish corridor by the bolshevik troops, as they believe that in such an event not only the Polish corridor but Danzig itself, and perhaps all of East and West Prussian territories, including the Polish province of Posen, would revert to Germany.

Danzig, being at the head of the Polish corridor and a free city, would naturally be the last to fall should the bolsheviks succeed in entering and gaining possession of the corridor. Of the event of Danzig itself being threatened by the Red advance at the arrival of a bolshevik force, several warships are stationed, it will be interesting to note what action will be taken by the entire military forces now quartered at Danzig, where the interallied high commission is also staying, and whether the British fleet would engage in actual battle with the Red fleet.

Whatever happens, the port of Danzig is bound to figure prominently in the dispatches from the Russo-Polish war area for some time to come.

THE HEAVENS IN SEPTEMBER.

By DR. C. S. BRAININ, Of the Columbia University Observatory Staff.

September is one of the months in which the sun claims a share of our attention, for it will cross the equator in the second day of the month, preparing us for the coming of winter. The exact time of this phenomenon by eastern standard time will be 8:10 a. m. on the morning of the 23d. The point on the equator which the sun occupies at this moment is known to astronomers as the autumnal equinox, for on that date the sun is above the horizon as long as it is below or, in other words, day and night are equally long.

Of course, this is slightly modified by the refraction of the atmosphere, and the day gains somewhat at the expense of the night. The former causes the sun to appear slightly higher in the sky than it really is, which near the horizon; the latter produces the twilight period, which is caused by the reflection of sunlight from the upper layers of atmosphere; after the sun has already been seen to dip below the horizon.

We have now to say about our friend, the moon. If you note the time of rising of the moon this month when it is about full, you will find that the time of moonrise is several consecutive nights in very close proximity. The moon rises about the time of sunset, and remains above the horizon until well after midnight. The full moon nearest to the time of the sun's arrival at the autumnal equinox is the full moon of September 23d. The moon is in conjunction with the sun on the 23d, and is in opposition to the sun on the 10th. The moon is in conjunction with the sun on the 23d, and is in opposition to the sun on the 10th.

On the average, the moon rises about an hour later each day, for it has to make the complete circuit of the heavens each month. Its orbit in the sky is very close to the ecliptic and may be considered practically identical with it for rough approximations. It so happens that the ecliptic's orientation in the heavens gives the minimum retardation of the moon's rising each month. The ecliptic is near the vernal or spring equinox. Of course, the moon is at this point once each month and so has a minimum retardation of its rising each month, but this can only be at full moon, when the sun is in the opposite part of the ecliptic from the moon. The moon is at this point once each month and so has a minimum retardation of its rising each month, but this can only be at full moon, when the sun is in the opposite part of the ecliptic from the moon.

Our monthly map shows but two planets, the all-but-invisible Uranus and ruddy Mars, far down on the western horizon, ready to disappear from our view or many months. Mars can be better observed before the close of the brighter twilight period in the southwestern quarter of the sky. Mars rapidly moving eastward through the field of stars. Those who have been following the motion will recall that only a few months ago Mars was a close neighbor of the fixed star Spica, in Virgo. Venus is also an evening star, but pendent nation. The famous Polish corridor, as the narrow strip of land along the "Vistula" connecting the main body of Poland with the port of Danzig has come to be known, is the only direct avenue for the shipment of supplies from the Baltic sea to interior Poland.

BRITISH BUSINESS MEN PLAN ANOTHER TRIP TO AMERICA

London.—American delegates who attended the recent meeting in Paris of the International Chamber of Commerce were entertained at a luncheon by the Association of British Chambers of Commerce.

Mr. Annville, member of Parliament, said that a return visit of British business men to the United States has been arranged for autumn, and a view to promoting the cooperation of the English speaking peoples.

Albert J. Hobson, who presided in Paris, said that the health of the world said the war had demonstrated that never again could the United States pretend that they were not concerned with European politics. In such circumstances it was most desirable that representative men of business in the two countries should meet to discuss those things which were most likely to lead to friction. Americans had convinced Englishmen of the necessity of getting alongside of them, and having done so they did not wish to let go but intended to know and understand Americans better.

Mr. Gillette, president of the United States Chamber of Commerce, said the Americans had come to this country to see how they could best meet the wants of the allied in raw materials, increase production, improve exchange and in other ways. He added that 600,000 men representing the intellect and energy of the United States were now in Europe, and he believed that by mutual help and by correlated effort they would be able to travel far on the same road with the British people.

650 ENROLLMENT PREDICTED AT H. S.

Holt Expects Biggest Attendance Yet—Several Changes Made.

An enrollment of more than 650 pupils is expected in the Janesville high school this semester, which opens September 7, according to an estimate made today by Frank Holt, new superintendent of schools. This will be an increase of about 30 students over last year's enrollment which was 620. The high school building has been cleaned and repaired throughout and the redecoration for the opening season. For the first time this year a teacher, trained especially for the work, will be placed in charge of the public speaking department. It is planned that high school students will be more active than in the past in putting on plays and in elocution work in general. Another new feature in the school will be the library, a new law requiring that every school board must now supply a library in every high school. Graduation in February. The first mid-year senior graduation class of the high school will take place in February, about 24 to graduate at that time. The system of semi-annual promotions, which was started four years ago, but this will be the first time that any class will have graduated at mid-year. Mr. Holt states that the housing problem for teachers has been well solved. The majority of teachers have already been placed, but a few more are still needed for married men teachers who are bringing their wives with them.

FEDERAL MEN HERE TO AID WAR VETS

With the intention of taking action on such cases of soldiers who may be in need of rehabilitation, a group of representatives from the district office of the federal board for vocational education, Chicago, will be in this city Tuesday and Wednesday and will make their headquarters at the local Red Cross rooms in the postoffice. These representatives are traveling about the country and are doing much good by giving information to disabled soldiers and helping them secure positions. A man who is in need of training or whose claim has been pending with the federal board is urged to call at the post office on one of these dates.

ILLINOIS FARMERS TAKE CAR CENSUS, FIND NO SHORTAGE

Chicago—The first survey of freight cars ever taken by the farmers of a state has just been completed through the Illinois Agricultural association, Sec. D. J. Thompson, who said, Illinois farmers did not believe there was a car shortage. The trouble with transportation, he characterized as "mobility," and he stated the farmers meant to find out whose fault it was.

Secretary Thompson said the association undertook its census after receiving reports from farmers over the state that they saw many cars standing idle on country tracks. Members of the association made daily records of the car initials and numbers of all cars at 44 stations located in 45 different counties for seven consecutive days. "The state farm bureau executive said, 'Of these 494 stations, 148 or 29.5 percent reported some of the same cars as trucks the last day of the count as they were on the tracks the first day of the count.'

"At all stations, 9,294 cars were listed the first day and of these cars, 938 out of 9,294 cars had not been moved from the country point for seven consecutive days. This is just a little over 10 percent of the cars at each point."

"No count was made in Chicago. In several other large yards the association enumerators were rejected from the yards by railroad officials."

"In Grundy county nine stations are reported. Four of these showed a complete clearance, whereas the other five showed that a total of 454 cars reported the first day, 246 identical cars were still on track seven days later."

"Mine operators say they were forced to idle many days each week leading to the strike of the miners which recently died up the mines just when the farmers were needing coal for threshing. At this same time before the strike in the coal fields at Clarkdale and at Wilkes, two trains of coal cars totaling 63 cars were reported empty at both first and last days of the count."

"At Bristol, Kendall county, 38 cars were removed during the entire week. At Dakota, Stephenson County, twenty loaded box cars stood on track all of the seven days."

"If we may take the total number of freight cars in the country on July 1, 1918, as a basis for computation, and consider that the percentage of immobility of cars is as great in Chicago, Toledo, and New York as in country points like Clarkdale, Fidelity and Low Point, it is very moderate when we say that the total number of cars which the railroad say they need to meet the transportation requirements of the present moment, is not a paltry total of immobile cars now in terminal yards and on side tracks at country points."

This survey shows pretty clearly to the farmer the Illinois excuse of 'car shortage' is largely camouflage, given to cover up some real deeper reason for the present transportation inefficiency. And to search for that reason will be the next job of the farmers' business organization."

PROPOSE SALE OF STOCK TO RAISE PAVILION MONEY

Plans to raise part of the funds for the erection of a combination stock sales pavilion and community building in Janesville through the sale of cattle to be donated by members of the several breeders' associations of the county were advanced at an informal meeting Thursday of the joint committee of the Chamber of Commerce and the farm bureau appointed to look into the matter. Under this scheme, every organized cattle raiser of the county would be called upon to donate one animal. It is believed that 200 could be brought together by this method and sold at a general sale to realize about $30,000.

Another meeting of the joint committee will be held at the Chamber of Commerce at 8 o'clock Monday night. No action could be taken on this plan at the last meeting because of the absence of several members. These men will be back on Monday, when definite steps are expected to be taken and the matter of working to get an armory building here as part of the plan for erecting a pavilion will be taken.

The DIARY OF AN ENGAGED GIRL by PHYLLIS PHILLIPS

The Blue Moon

A TALE OF THE PLATWOODS

By DAVID ANDERSON

Apparently he did not find it. The pale fires died out of his eyes; his face quivered; his breast seemed to collapse; the tense silence shattered with a groan. The intruder of strength that seemed to dower him with irresistible force fell from him as a mantle. He tottered as the girl led him, like a tired child, back to his chair.

"The father! The daughter of the Wild Man!"

He stepped aside out of the open door and let the sun in. He reached across the floor and caught her where she stooped over the old man's chair. She seemed for the moment to have forgotten his presence. He glanced around the cabin. It was really four cabins—four rooms—under one roof. The door by which they had entered faced south. He stood in the center room, or center cabin. A curtained opening led to another room on the west, a similar one on the east. The curtain looped back and tied with a bit of ribbon, disclosed a room on the east. The closed door gave entrance to the third room, probably the kitchen, jugged a little to allow for a window near the northwest corner of the center room.

This room traveled to the fire place, a revolver—a very dependable looking six-gun—lay upon the mantel. Above it, draped across a draped American flag, hung a silk sash, a tasseled cord, a pair of silver spurs, and a sword. Leaped in the sword hilt were two birds of ribbon, one purple, the other gold. There came a dim remembrance that he had once heard somewhere these were the colors of a famous costume that greatly distinguished itself in the Indian wars.

The half minute or more he had spent looking over the room had given him time to recover his calm, and now his glance came back to the ruin in the chair.

The Wild Man was whetting his knife against his palm, mumbling and muttering. He seemed to glint over the glint of it—and the girl within easy reach of his hand. The Pearlhunter stiffened; gathered himself to spring. She happened to look up, caught him unconsciously of any danger. She came to the floor, picked up her basket and his hat and put them on the table beside the vase of wild roses.

"You're not afraid," asked the Pearlhunter.

"I wouldn't harm a fly."

"But the knife?"

"He plays with it by the hour."

"That knife," as if he might have thought it raised, "he keeps it with him night and day. I fear death will sometime come of that knife!"

"His eyes urged her to look at you."

"Seven years ago, as you see him."

"Up to that time he was the most wonderful father a girl ever had."

He was a man until he and he didn't wear a beard. Those who knew him then wouldn't know him now. It was seven years ago, when he was twelve, that I remember it. That evening I heard a groan at the kitchen door. I ran out, and there was Daddy, holding the door post to keep from falling, his hands covered with blood, and blood all over his face and hair. I helped him wash off the blood and discover it came from a wound in his head. I bound it up the best I could and ran to the village for the doctor. When he came he said Daddy had been shot. There was a long scar—like a groove—that the doctor said was made by the bullet. It had caused convulsion of the brain. Since that he has been like this. The knife he must have taken from the person that shot him, and he had none of his own. It was clutched tight in his hand when I found him—the knife, and this—

She beckoned him across the room to the lockcase. It was the first carpet the Pearlhunter had ever walked over. He set his feet down like a man, and he felt like a man.

He fumbled out from behind a row of books a small packet, with the caution:

"You mustn't let Daddy see it. If he will go wild if you do. I used to keep it stuck behind the picture, but it worked out into sight one day, and he drove the knife through before I could get it away from him. If he ever finds the man it belongs to he'll serve him the same way. I'm afraid."

She handed him the packet, and he hunted the woods—to see if he can find him. There, you can see where the knife went through.

He had, in unwrapping a fold of paper as she spoke. The sight of its contents surprised a low exclamation from the Pearlhunter. It was a red mask.

The Pearlhunter fingered the bit of stuff clothed across the girl's palm with such quick eagerness. The red mask! The slit of the knife near an eye hole—no man in the Platwoods better able to read the face of a man than the Pearlhunter. He felt like a man.

found the book and hurried back to the chair. Opening it, she laid it upon the old man's knee. He looked up at her, and she saw the old man's face, and he noticed that it was carpeted, and was otherwise furnished quite in keeping with the room in which he stood, certain in her decided contrast to the room upon the east.

But he had no time to reflect on all these things, for the girl, who appeared in a moment carrying a cello, which she placed between the old man's knees. She put the bow in his right hand and lifted his chin with the left. He laid his cheek down upon the instrument, grew quiet. The faterling bow tried to vibrate the strings, but in vain. The old man's head seemed to shrink together. His chin dropped down upon his breast. But the next instant he sat upright, his right hand raised, and he started to rise, as if by a power outside himself.

The girl caught the falling bow from his hand; drew the cello to her and deftly twisted the strings in tune. The Pearlhunter stood amazed at what followed. The tones of the cello seemed to reach out into the quiet evening, purple with the close of day, and gather up the sounds of wood and stream, and bring them in and strew them down like falling roseleaves—the fall of a distant oar; the lap of water on a rocky shore; the pulse of a current that rose and fell; the croon of contented trees under a serene sunset. He did not know that what he heard was Beethoven's incomparably wondrous Moonlight Sonata.

The old man's head had dropped forward, his eyes were closed, his face muffled in his rumpled beard upon his breast. Leaning the cello against the chair, the girl picked up a limp arm, laid it about her neck, and led him away, like a drowsy child, through the curtained entrance of the west room.

With dissolved, the evening world became a vast emptiness, an emptiness the silence poured in to fill. It caught the Pearlhunter in his flood; it held him; overwhelmed him; found out little nooks and crannies of his nature he never knew were there. The evening parted, a soft step crossed the carpet. The world came back. A deep breath swelled the chest of the Pearlhunter, and he had in the only breath he had taken since the song began.

"Next to the thrush song, that was the most wonderful thing I ever heard!"

The girl looked up from rearranging the cushions in the old man's chair.

"Daddy taught me. He said it was my gift. He had the deepest, softest voice," she went on, more to herself than to him. "Like the low tone of the cello, though it always made him sad to sing. Long ago, when I was a child, he used to hold me in his arms and sing to me. He was a wonderful father before."

She bowed her head over the chair and the Pearlhunter, fanned he said, "But your face was soon up again, brave and cheerful."

"You could sing."

"Me!" It was about the most startling thing she could have said. (The dry splutter of a grin pinched up the corners of his eyes. "I have the words to myself if I tried.")

She looked at him. The faintest suggestion of a frown seemed to be trying to find a place on her face.

"I know what I am saying when I say that. I can't sing. Your voice is soft and low and strong—like Daddy's. I didn't notice it till a bit ago, but I think I felt it all along. I guess that's why I tried to sing."

The Pearlhunter was standing quite close to her. His eyes dwelt in the plumed white mystery of her throat; the bit of ribbon rising and falling upon her bosom. It was an old ribbon, old and worn. He glanced at the knife through before he could get it away from him. If he ever finds the man it belongs to he'll serve him the same way. I'm afraid.

He fumbled out from behind a row of books a small packet, with the caution:

"You mustn't let Daddy see it. If he will go wild if you do. I used to keep it stuck behind the picture, but it worked out into sight one day, and he drove the knife through before I could get it away from him. If he ever finds the man it belongs to he'll serve him the same way. I'm afraid."

ON PAGE 2EUROPEANS HAVE INTENSE DESIRE TO SEE BLUE OCEAN

Budapest.—The desire but inability of once wealthy people to travel westward to European seaports and the United States, owing to passport and money difficulties, is one of the results of the war to be noted in central Europe, the Balkans and far into Asia Minor.

The intense of this desire was registered recently by Admiral Horthy, regent of Hungary, who said: "Why I wake up nights thinking of the sea, and in my dreams I hear the sound of the ocean. Consider I have sailed the world around and now I can't even get a glimpse of blue water. It is insupportable to me."

"How I envy you in your travels," said Queen Marie of Rumania, to the travel-weary Admiral. "I have not been able to see the ocean for years."

"If it were not for my duty to my country," she said, "I would go to the sea, the national leader, one hot, breathless night in Sivas, Turkey, 'I should be tempted to board ship and steam westward. No one but ourselves can realize how tired and numb the mind becomes, one here, and the other there, in the countries and people we know in happier days."

Women, wives of teachers and preachers, who are well-to-do, and farmers, who have been sorely hit by the war, suffer especially from the lack of the cheap holidays they were used to. They are waiting for the Italian Riviera, Paris or London, where they saw the old sights anew, the styles in clothes, brushed up, and the old acquaintances, who have come home content to await next year's trip.

"I really believe many of us shall fall sick if we are not able to satisfy this travel fever," said Mrs. R. Vambery, wife of the Hungarian criminologist, who was a great traveler as was his father before him.

"Have pity on us poor travelers. To think that now I can't buy a new dress, I who once had the money to roam the world!"

The ministers of foreign affairs in these countries are beset by applications of their fellow citizens, who are waiting for the chance to represent themselves or consuls, and many near important men at home are willing to accept positions as clerks abroad, merely to get away from home.

This fever is not limited to the formerly well-to-do. Recently a notice was published in a Budapest paper that any man or woman wishing to work in the United States would be furnished with a ticket and $50 expense money by the American consulate in Budapest.

High commissioner, U. Grant Smith, had to request the military authorities to keep away the mob from his office, and the mob was waiting for the chance to get away from home.

The railways in Hungary, in Rumania and in every country, though worn out by the war, are always crowded with people, and the stations are big crowds of men, women and children, waiting for the trains.

"Where are all these people going to?" the conductor asked a conductor at Bucharest.

He stared a moment in astonishment. "Why, anywhere, wherever they want to go. They're travel mad."

DISABLED WAR VETS
PLAN ORGANIZATION

(By Associated Press.)
Cincinnati, Aug. 27.—A disabled veterans of the world war will form a national organization in Cincinnati early in September. It plans to hold a convention in the city, and to carry on a "Carry On" club of the country is entitled to send one delegate.

The program of the national convention is being worked out, tentatively by the executive board of the Cincinnati Association of Disabled Veterans.
